New York, or breezed inwhatever may be the correct of describing a Chicago enrance-yesterday afternoon.

Accompanying Packey was his manager, Harry Gilmore, jr. Packey had two or three bruises on his nose; Harry Gilmore, jr., had an overcoat with shoulders as wide as Jeff's. It was hard to tell, from appearances, which was the fighter.

For that matter no one would take McFarland for a fighter at the first glance. He is a pleasant looking youngster of nineteen, without any marks that usually come from ring battles, with a perpetual smile, dressed neatly in a quiet business suit, a high collar and a black tie.

You have to look Packey over carefully before making sure in your mind that he is really a fighter. Then you begin to notice that his neck fills his collar, that he has a good round must be tough to get an attack every jaw, and that the skin is drawn tight "Murphy isn't afraid of anything," I said.

"Then you draw the color line?"

"I wouldn't draw it on Gans." grinned Packey.

"Do you like fighting?"

"Yes, I like it."

"Oh, go on." broke in Mr. Harry Gilmore, ir. "You like the money you get for it."

"Nobody has to get out an injunction to force me to take the money, admitted Packey, "but I really like to night, it's fun. I only got $5 for my first fight, and I had to split that, But i kept at it. I've had forty-three fights, and I won thirty-three of them with straight knockouts. Never lost any at straight knockouts. Never lost any at straight knockouts. Never lost any at all and no draws. I guess that's pretty soft so far."

"No decision," explained Packey. "But I had him nearly out two or three times in the fight and had to be very careful not to finish him. The Governor ordered the
